Lushendrie Naidu is a project officer with the South Durban Community Environmental Alliance (SDCEA) working on issues, such as climate change, asthma and health related problems, environmental impact assessments and various other social and environmental issues affecting the people of south Durban. She graduated from the University of KwaZulu Natal with a BSc in Microbiology but has always had a keen interest in environmental justice issues.

She says, “I have been at SDCEA for about 2 and a half years working as a project officer and have found this as the most rewarding experience. Working with the communities and educating the people that have been at the wrath of the industries that continue to pollute our skies every day, has brought me the greatest joy. Knowing that I have a responsibility to act upon and promote a sustainable future for the generations of people after us.”
